ABOUT THE INSTITUTE

The University of Georgia, Griffin Campus recognizes the complex issues and challenges that face today's security and disasters specialists. In order to address the critical needs of practitioners, the Institute of Homeland Security & Emergency Management engages leaders from both the public and private sectors to increase their tactical readiness through intensive study in real-world applications.

The Cohort Model

Practitioners will have the opportunity to learn in a professional environment, surrounded by their Homeland Security and Emergency Management peers. Each module is one-week in length, utilizing 40 hours of instructional time, taught at the University of Georgia, Griffin Campus. The Institute is comprised of seven modules per cohort of students, each offering a modern and comprehensive approach to community readiness and strategic security solutions. Private Sector students may waive the Public Administration Module. Professionals with busy schedules can also choose to pursue a 'Specialist Track' in one of three disciplines:

- Specialist in Homeland Security
- Specialist in Emergency Management
- Specialist in Homeland Security and Emergency Management Technology

A Specialist Track consists of three modules that offer the practitioner a concentrated focus on their preference from three discipline choices.

“Our top focus - protecting our Nation - must go beyond homeland preparedness; America will only be secure if we deal with threats before they happen, not just after they happen.”
~ The Honorable Bill Frist, Former Senate Majority Leader

A New Approach to Community Readiness

The concept of a public/private approach to Homeland Security and Emergency Management offers unique opportunities for expanded and total community readiness. Today’s practitioners understand the need for interoperability and seamless communications when planning, responding, and mitigating acts of terror and disasters. When a disaster or threat occurs, the critical resources and valuable assets of all public and private entities are relied upon to restore civility and calm the fears of an anxious public. “Prevention and Preparedness” is the cornerstone of the profession of Homeland Security and Emergency Management. The University of Georgia, Griffin Campus seeks to enhance the knowledge and skills of practitioners and leaders through a Professional Program that expands the competencies required for successful community planning.

Engaging Innovative Thought & Diverse Backgrounds

The Homeland Security & Emergency Management Institute of UGA-Griffin offers a unique approach to developing those community planning, problem-solving, and decision-making skills necessary for a holistic readiness initiative. In traditional programs, public or government employees served as the target audience for student recruitment. In this program, the opportunity of bringing professionals from both the public and private sectors will foster innovative approaches to solutions and inspire creative policies and solutions.

Program Goal and Objectives

The Homeland Security & Emergency Management Institute of UGA-Griffin was created to promote professionalism and expand the knowledge base of practitioners and future leaders. From our first rate faculty, you receive the best thinking and best practices on prevention, mobilization, and optimal outcomes in the event of a disaster, homeland threat or attack. Specifically, the program will focus on:

- Bringing together the best assets and resources from both the public and private sector entities of Homeland Security and Emergency Management.
- Promote interoperability among agencies, businesses, governments, and citizens by engaging in critical-thinking lectures, exercises, and group dynamics.
- Explore diverse areas of knowledge as they apply to the total concept of community preparedness and security platforms.
- Expose participants to the latest technology related to homeland security and emergency management – its benefits and usage.
- Prepare professionals to assume leadership roles in their jurisdictions, companies, or organizations.
- Utilize the content of each module to help professionals evaluate the status of their agency, company, or organization as it relates to preparedness.

PROGRAM HIGHLIGHTS . . .
